National Workshop on
"How to publish Scholarly Books & Open Access"

September 6th, 2022

Organizer
Allama Iqbal Library, University of Kashmir
In collaboration with
Taylor & Francis

Introduction

Scholarly publishing environment is evolving rapidly in many ways with more options and decisions with the scholarly writers. The publishing landscape has also seen the rise of open access publishing made possible by the availability of technology to accomplish the publishing and distribution of scholarly works. Open access publishing allows works to be read and used by more people across the globe. Many publishers have embraced new models of scholarly publishing to accommodate open access in the 21st century for both books and scholarly articles. Universities today also promote the opportunities by adopting open access policies and by supporting open access publications.

In recent years we have also seen the rise of national government policies supporting open access to publications created from taxpayer-funded research, and open data policies. All these forms of open access are based on compliance with copyright law and other applicable laws and are not intended to undermine intellectual property rights.

The workshop shall focus on:

- Publishing books and scholarly content with Taylor & Francis
- Role of information professionals in the acquaintance of new and emerging scholarly Open Access channels
- Libraries as inclusive partners in the publishing world
- Barriers to scholarly communication and role of libraries
- Open access and its impact on the scholarly communication
- Role of libraries in the open access scholarly communication
- Empowering Scholarly Communities
- Scholarly Communication & social media
- Libraries as Developmental Catalysts of Scholarly Communication
- Trust, Transparency, and Transformation in Scholarly Communication
- Understand publishing, timelines, copyrights, royalties, publishing ethics and other important factors of publishing
